I have to say, it hit a little close to home when Steam suggested that I play Vodka, a Space Invaders-esque wave shooter by Russian developer Charlie H. Not only was the game called Vodka, but the store page also advertised that it would tell you about the harm of this drink, which was more than a little patronising. Thanks Charlie, I think we already get it.

Presumably unlike most of the people whose reviews I read on Vodka, I went into the experience totally sober, and as a result the game in no way surprised me. I can't say that a glance through Charlie's other titles didn't influence my view going in (Shake Your Money Simulator 2016, Super Duper Flying Genocide 2017), but I tried to keep my opinions largely objective, and I can say without a shred of doubt that Vodka in no way differentiates itself from its predecessors in terms of quality or memehood.

It is at least an actual video game. Killing enemies gives you money, money lets you buy upgrades, upgrades let you kill enemies more effectively. It's perfectly functional, but if we're going to start giving out awards for that, I think we have to sit down and have a good, hard think about what the hell we're actually doing using Steam in this day and age.

Vodka is clearly satire of something. It's hard to say what - it could ostensibly be making fun of anything from the competence of the Russian military (they deployed a 2D image of Linda Perry to defend against invaders) to Americans in general. You just can't tell, because all I'm seeing is colours. If I know one thing about *Vodka*, it's that the game is at least 40% hotting garbage \(zing\).. Good old games.. Not gonna lie, worth the 69 cents, the only huge issue i have is that it gets hard to see things through the coins.. I actually recommend this game alot

Mainly becuse it gives that vibe of an old arcade style space shooter game
The game has alot of potential and cant wait for new stuff to be added

..For Slav Men..... 9000000000000000000000\10 mesterpines. 10 out of 10 simulations of colonization of space by Russians.. The best game there is.
